AUBURN NEIGHBOURHOOD PROFILE

Auburn was named after Oliver Goldsmith's poem 'The Deserted Village', which describes Auburn in England as "the loveliest village of the plain."

The Auburn area was once used by Indigenous people as a marketplace for the exchange of goods, a site for ritual battles and a 'Law Place' for ceremonies. Auburn is bounded in the west by Duck River, once a vital source of food and living resources and believed to have been the agreed boundary between the Barramattagal and the Wategora clans.

Today, Auburn prides itself on being one of the most multicultural communities in Australia, with 81.5% of the population speaking a language other than English at home and 64.5% of the population born overseas. The top languages spoken at home other than English are Arabic (13.2%), Mandarin (12.1%) and Turkish (8.5%)

People travel from all over Sydney to shop, eat and pray in Auburn, it is one of the largest town centres in Cumberland (in terms of the number of shopfront businesses). The diverse food and retail businesses in the area reflect the diversity of this multicultural community, with food businesses offering 15 different cuisines. Consultation reveals that the community values how active Auburn street life is, especially at night time with shops and restaurants open late.

Auburn is a recognised strategic night time precinct (according to the GSC Central City District Plan).

Auburn has a diverse and active cultural life, with many events and activities taking place in the area, including at community facilities such as the Peacock Gallery, Auburn Centre for Community, Auburn Library and also outdoor venues such as the Auburn Botanic Gardens. There are also a range of cultural groups and organisations based in Auburn that bring the community together.

GUILDFORD NEIGHBOURHOOD PROFILE

Guildford was named in 1837 in honour of the Earl of Guildford. Linnwood House, a state heritage listed building and grounds and an important landmark, is located in Guildford and highly valued by the community.

The eastern side of the train station is well-established town centre providing food and beverage hospitality, retail and personal services.

Today, Guildford is culturally diverse and home to a large Arabic-speaking population (32.3% compared to 15.2% in the Cumberland LGA). This is reflected in the large number of Lebanese food businesses (12) that operate in the area. Consultation tells us that the community thinks the culturally diverse food and retail offering is part of what makes Guildford special.

SOUTH GRANVILLE NEIGHBOURHOOD PROFILE

South Granville is a largely residential neighbourhood with an employment precinct at the southern end of the suburb. To the east lies Duck River that was once a vital source of food and living resources, and believed to have been the agreed boundary between the Burramattagal and the Wategora clans. Spanning the length of the Duck River is a stretch of green and open space.

There is no defined neighbourhood centre in South Granville, rather there are smaller collections of shops on Dellwood Street, Blaxcell Street, and Clyde Street.
